SPECIAL ISSUE:

Urban Ecology

Vol 31 Issue 2 April 2006

This special issue of Austral Ecology reflects the recent explosion in interest in the ecology of urban areas in Australia, and other southern continents, and discusses ecological processes and patterns of biodiversity in these areas. It collates a diverse range of ecological research from a wide range of research groups, with the aim of reviewing progress to date and identifying fruitful avenues for the future. Featuring a peer-reviewed mixture of integrative reviews and conceptual developments, broad-scale reviews of empirical findings, and more focused studies highlighting important issues, this special issue is not one to be missed!
